I: NEW DISCOVERIES AMONG THE GREAT APES OF GAMESTOP

A Perspective by U/CSMBIRD, Behaviorism Girl

DEEP IN THE LUSH of Stonkanda's Volcano National Park, I found myself amidst the habitat of the Great Apes of GameStop. Appearing as smooth-brained chimps throwing pennies towards idiocy, I found a stark opposition to the thoughts of the outsiders. Rather, I found these apes to be wise, caring, and willing to place life on hodl for the betterment of their habitat and for their favorite fruit tree.

In January, these apes migrated into a new territory of trees so tightly wrapped with vines that the forest could not provide fruit. The complex layers of corruption suffocated the jungle making life for the average ape unnecessarily difficult. But day after day, these vines, which had been intricately woven throughout the previous decades of the stock market, became unwoven, one by one, by mere apes.

From the perspective of a behaviorist, it was apparent that these primates had drivers and robust motivating operations in play to reinforce the untangling of these vines from their beloved GameStop, a fruit tree. For decades, the apes had believed these vines were crucial to the market structure, but it was found instead to cripple the economy that was once thought to be open and fair.

As each vine was removed, a new layer of corruption was uncovered and more knowledge was gained, providing the behavioral momentum to keep the apes engaged in research. In matching law, the input of the behavior is worth the response given by the environment due to the behavior, and we can see that each new piece of information that apes discovered reinforced each individual ape to work not only for the greater good of their beloved GameStop tree, but for the economy and forest as a whole.

After observing the behavior of the Great Apes of GameStop, it was clear they were not the "dumb-money" chimps the media had painted them as, but instead were rational and caring creatures uncovering corruption at the highest levels of the jungle. Their behavior was also shown to be reinforced on a simple principle of being excellent to each other, constantly looking for ways to both learn and to educate.

At this point in my research, I focused my attention towards the media, which had always presented the apes to be destructive. A lot could be learned by studying the manipulative force that was spinning the GameStop narrative, and it was obvious that their behavior was suspicious.

Organisms do not engage in behavior without reason. There are four functions for all behavior: sensory, escape, attention, and tangibles. The media is attention driven given they rely on viewership for monetization. However, the structure of the media landscape does not rely on any guiding principles of cash flow, but instead measured by influence.

The power the media yields in swaying public opinion is a valuable resource. The biggest financial institutions in the world, alongside hedge funds and market makers, have been buying this influence to push propaganda and move the market in favor of their current positions. The tangible behavioral functions are then the driving force behind these manipulative and untrue stories. Those same entities have gone as far as paying other animals in the jungle to pretend to be apes and spread FUD.

But the Great Apes of GameStop are resilient. They continue to filter through these obviously paid for, planted stories which fail to tell the whole story. The apes have mostly shut out all information from financial media organizations. Instead, these apes rely only on what GameStop tells them through the emails from GMGE investor relations or the incredibly cryptic tweets from Ryan Cohen.

The number of apes continues to grow and they remain in a constant state of hype. It is the healthiest behavior of all the subjects studied here.

The GameStop tree has never been stronger. Its roots are buried deep in the ground and its leaves are exposed to a wide customer base. As the Great Apes of GameStop continue their clearing of the vines of corruption, the tree is expected to once again provide fruit.

II: BE EXCELLENT TO EACH OTHER: AN APE'S MORAL COMPASS

An opinion by U/RALLYINTHENORTH, Nightly Fireside Chat Guy

THE PHRASE has been a daily reminder of the standard by which apes ought to hodl themselves in regard to the treatment of one another and then thereafter as they go about their daily lives. Originally coined by William S. Preston Esq. and Theodore Logan, later adopted by the SuperStonk community, the simple command acts as a guiding principle and moral compass for apes.

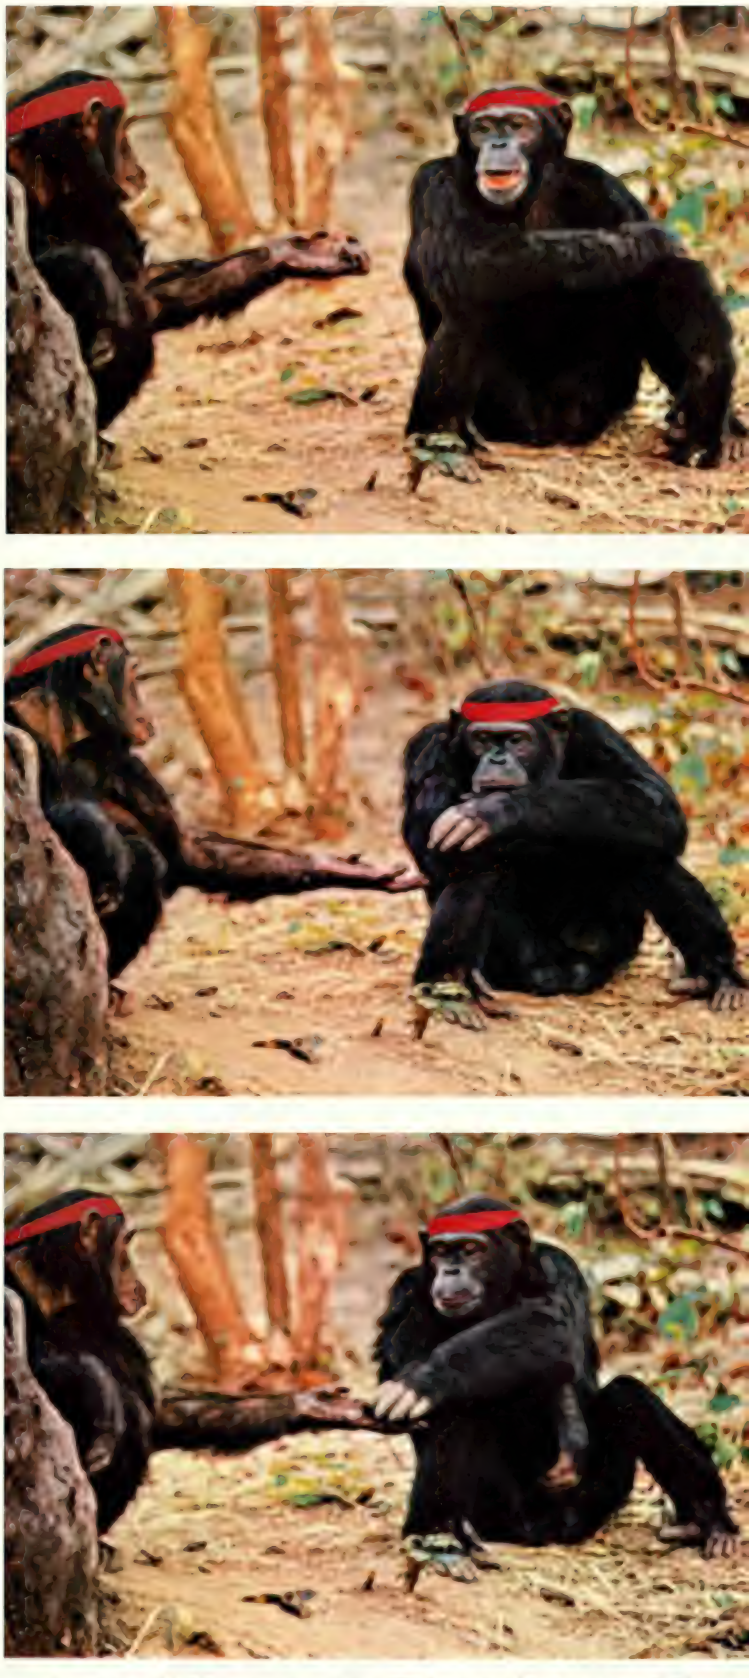
The humble words are clear: "Be Excellent To Each Other." For months it was the official sign off of the Daily Stonk and was a constant reminder of the single most important rule that all apes learned to obey. It is an order that has only one interpretation, and when followed to the letter, accomplishes several objectives.

Every day, apes endure ridicule and insults, while they are constantly slandered by the media. Behind each silly avatar name on Reddit is an ape that carries with them the weight of their own world and each ape deserves the respect of the ape hodling beside them. By our own accord, there is no better way to carry oneself than the honest representation of thoughts, feelings, and actions. These things ultimately breed acceptance and inclusion.

There are also bad actors who have infiltrated the ranks on Reddit with hopes of splitting up the communities surrounding GameStop. Being excellent to them is the way apes win. To be kind, thoughtful, considerate, and fairly critical – even in the face of naysayers and bad actors who are keen to tear the community apart – those are the tenets of being excellent to one another.

> "Keep being great folks. Tomorrow is a new day."

Apes remain hopeful for the fate of their civilization. The SuperStonk community has unmatched values that could one day lead to an era of prosperity, progress, and justice; a rather excellent future indeed.



A new ape (right) is presented with DD by a wrinkle brain ape (left). The new ape eventually understands the post and forms several wrinkles. The new ape then takes the DD in his diamond hands.

III: APES HODLING TOGETHER FOR A BETTER FUTURE

By U/ZEDINSTEAD, Editor-in-Chief

THERE ARE a devastating number of orphaned orangutans every year due to deforestation. Gorillas are losing their homes and many need constant protection from poachers. Chimpanzees are literally being hunted for bushmeat.

Every one of the world's 22 species of apes is threatened with extinction. Our closest living ancestral relative is simply being denied the familial respect they deserve. But hopefully, in a post-MOASS world, GameStop apes will be a guiding force for good in the world and provide the simian species the attention they so desperately need.

Degradation of forests through logging, mining, farming, and other forms of land development are the driving factors towards the habitat loss of the great apes of the world. With proper funding, these rainforests could become protected lands, guarded against illegal logging and against poaching.

The concept that our simian brothers are being killed, either for sport or bushmeat, is beyond monstrous. This treatment towards apes is even more loathsome than naked short selling a good company out of existence by illegal means.

But it is more than just primates that will need our attention. The environment has been neglected since the industrial revolution first sparked and it is time that a new level of focus is shown to the planet we call home. The cascading effects of climate change will eventually harm every living creature, no matter how innocent they are in the earth's destruction.

Some apes are listed as endangered, while others are considered critically endangered. The semantics of such classifications are laughable, as all animals will be facing environmental threats that will be unmanageable unless acted upon soon.

While some GameStop apes are hodling for lambos, most seem to be hodling for the chance to make an impact in the world and create a better future for everyone.

WHALE TEETH FOR MOASS: THE HISTORY OF A MEME AND RELATION TO GME

An adventure story by U/TDETLES

THOUGHT TO BE long extinct, the great whale teeth meme was a gentle creature. It was one of myth and legend, known for its ability to filter out falsehoods, or to resemble the pattern that is made in after-hours trading of GME. But it wasn't until early 2021 that researchers began to learn of the existence of a living whale teeth meme.

It descended upon the dankmemes subreddit and garnered only a few measly upvotes as users were not quite certain what to make of the whale teeth meme. The reasons for its return are not quite clear, but some suspect that the assault on the SuperStonk subreddit was orchestrated by wild packs of krill. It has long since been hypothesized that whale teeth memes cannot resist the taste of krill.

When the whale teeth memes were first posted to SuperStonk, they were met with hostility. The relation to GameStop could not at first be seen by the untrained eye, but the whale teeth memes were telling a story of dedication and persistence, much like the overall value investing strategy in buying and hodling shares of GameStop.

It is important to note that not all whale teeth memes in fact contain whales or teeth. Sometimes the whales are replaced by dolphins with their sharp pointy teeth. Other times, orcas are featured. There are of course the memes of baleen basking in all their glory. And even still, there are some that don't show teeth at all. But which ever type presented, the intentions behind every genuine whale teeth meme is the encouragement for the mother of all short squeezes to commence.

> "Whale teeth are forever. Every day is moonday when you WHALE TEETH for MOASS."

Recent evidence suggests that a longstanding feud exists between the whale teeth memes and the llama leg memes. Little is know about llama leg memes. It is clear these formats are at war with each other and that the llamas are testing the waters for their next attack and chance for an uprising, in their ultimate attempt to take the top position for obscure meme in the subreddit.

The conflicts between the meme formats have cooled down. For now, the whale teeth memes remain in the alpha role. The baleen is used to filter krill, but has been helping to filter the misinformation about GameStop and their future place in the retail and gaming industries. For too long, the narrative surrounding GME was controlled by the few, but with the filtering power of baleen, apes are able to digest the best information about their favorite stock.

The whale teeth memes had been lying in the depths of Reddit, waiting for their opportunity to help take down Wall Street and provide retail investors a fair chance in the market. Every ape is doing their part and the whales with their teeth are in this fight right alongside them. The memes will never stop. The whale teeth are forever. WHALE TEETH for MOASS.

Whale Teeth vs Llama Legs

In Peru, llama leg memes prepare their next attack against the whale teeth memes. It is believed that llama legs have weak knees, but these reports are unconfirmed. (right)

Raised patches of thick skin called callosities are seen on right whales. The hairs on a whale's face appear in much the same places as those on the face of a human male. This whale hasn't shaved since buying GME in January. (left)

AIRBORNE APES TAKE TO THE SKY: RECONNAISSANCE OF CITADEL AT NIGHT

An exploration by U/CHASING4TENDIES & U/MONKEEINTHESKY, Drone Operator Guys

A PILOT AND A NAVIGATOR work as a team to complete reconnaissance missions and our mission is simple: observe and report activity at Citadel L.L.C. We know that the midnight oil is being burned and we hoped to learn more about their operations at night, from the sky.

Our first mission did not yield interesting footage, but it did provide valuable logistical insights, like finding a secluded take-off zone and learning which side of the building had the most offices. We also discovered that the top two floors were above the drone's vertical limit due to a bit of software that prevented us from rising above a regulated altitude. However, a software patch allowed us to reach new heights, and with a modified drone in hand we met again a few weeks later to see if we might find CEO Ken Griffin at his desk eating mayonnaise.

Our ascent was slow, climbing alongside the 580 ft tall building. We reached the third floor from the top and saw about a half dozen people which appeared to be custodial staff, though it is believed Citadel employees could be seen milling around, pointing and talking to staff.

Using the drone's upgrade, we rose to the top two floors, scanning the offices in hopes to find Griffin shredding documents, but nobody was home. We brought the drone in for a soft landing, and went home to review the footage. Since the aircraft records in 4K resolution, we have the ability to zoom in and closely analyze what is happening in the offices.

Upon review of the footage, we discovered that the custodial staff we saw was actually a moving crew with 3MD, a company that provides relocation services. Most likely, they were packing up as part of a move to an office in New York.

The Airborne Ape Team will continue our reconnaissance work, recording financial buildings who keep the lights on at night and posting the footage for the community to consume and analyze.

The diamond handed drone has a top speed of 40 mph and records steady 4K footage, even in the heavy winds of Chicago (top). Employees from 3MD can be seen in the drone footage packing up the offices in the Citadel building (bottom).
